Call for Papers

Journal of Commodity Markets

Special Issue:
“Shipping Economics and Finance”

The Journal of Commodity Markets announces a special issue welcoming theoretical, applied, empirical, and policy-oriented research papers in the areas of shipping economics and finance. Shipping is the backbone of the world economy since it facilitates 80% of the global trade and provides the link between commodity supply and demand. This special issue aims to publish recent original contributions across the different sectors of the maritime industry and bring together both applied and theoretical research.

Specific areas of interest for the special issue include, but are not limited to, the following: investment analysis and performance, trading strategies, financial analysis of shipping companies, sources of capital for shipping companies, port and terminal finance, risk management in shipping, maritime economics and analysis, econometric modelling of shipping markets, asset pricing for the shipping sector, and financial risk assessment.

The special issue will consider revised and substantially extended versions of selected papers presented at the 2016 International Association of Maritime Economists (IAME) Conference (Hamburg 23 – 26 August 2016), but we also strongly encourage researchers who are unable to participate in the conference to submit papers for this call. All papers will go through the same review process, irrespective of whether they have been presented at the conference. The deadline for submissions is September 30, 2016. The special issue editors anticipate to make final decisions by December 31, 2016. Manuscripts that are rejected for the special issue can subsequently be submitted to the journal as a regular submission.

Papers can be submitted via the journal’s webpage:
